Lightning bugs and fireflies are the same insect, but what you probably call them is a matter of geography. While lightning bug is the preferred term in much of the eastern United States, most people in the western part of the country call them fireflies, according to a study published by Mental Floss. Many people in the study, including in the ...

It's Lightning Bug Season, So Be On The Lookout For These ...

Speaking of predators, firefly blood contains a defensive steroid called lucibufagins, which makes them unappetizing to potential hunters. Once predators get a bite, they associate the unpleasant taste with firefly light and avoid attacking the lightning bugs in the future.
