I first started with Bad Boys: The Actors of the Film Noir and then went to Femme Noir: Bad Girls of Film which is again a good, solid book. Yet it's not complete. For example, not much is written about the plastic surgeries some of the actress had. Not much is mentioned about the casting couch in which some of them slept their way to important roles (and Joan Crawford was a frequent ...

Mini Bio (1) One is certainly hard-pressed to think of another true "bad girl" representative so closely identifiable with film noir than hard-looking blonde actress Audrey Totter. While she remained a "B"-tier actress for most her career, she was an "A" quality actress and one of filmdom's most intriguing ladies.
